

Due to the current situation (COVID-19), the Department of Communication has adapted its courses offerings and has integrated remote learning for international/Canadian students. Here is the strategy outlined by the graduate studies committee to facilitate the transition and integration of incoming students into our MA/Ph.D programs. Informing Students about Distance Learning Opportunities

+1d

- April 2020: A letter was sent to all students who received an offer of admission outlining the distance, online, hybrid courses that will be offered in Fall 2020 by our department.
- Distance Courses: Students can choose to log on to view classes in real time (in synchronous mode) or view recordings of the classes (in asynchronous mode).
- Online Course: Pre-recorded and offered online only, students may participate in asynchronous mode, via the learning management system.

Communication and "Virtual Community"

+1m

- June 15: We are hosting a "FAQ virtual meeting" for new students. Contact us to register!
- The department will provide regular updates to students to keep them informed via e-mail, "virtual meetings" or video capsules. Keep in touch!
- The Graduate Students Association will create a "virtual community" to connect new and current students.

Helping International and Canadian Students Integrate

- We will provide resources and information to students about how to register for distance courses, how to use the learning management system, etc.
- We will encourage students to participate in online activities organized by the Graduate Students Association.
- We will organize a "Virtual Welcome Day" for new International/Canadian students in August or September 2020.
